Chosen Option : 4

Comprehension:

Read the given passage and answer the questions that follow.

In the late spring of 1930, Philip Rider came to the abandoned lighthouse at the mouth of the river Adder on the Essex coast. He was a painter of birds and of nature. He was afflicted with a hunched back and a deformed, twisted hand. Rider loved all creatures. His heart was filled with pity and understanding. He had mastered his handicap, but he could not master the rejection he suffered because of his appearance. People shunned him as evil. This drove him into seclusion.

One November afternoon, a child approached his lighthouse studio. In her arms, she carried a burden. She was no more than twelve, slender, dirty, nervous and timid as a bird, but beneath the dirt, as beautiful as a fairy. She seemed frightened of the ugly man she had come to see. But, she had heard somewhere in the swamp-land, that this man who lived in the lighthouse had magic that could heal injured things.

She had never seen Rider before and was close to fleeing in panic when she saw him. She stood there staring, but his voice was deep and kind when he spoke to her. "What is it, child?" She timidly moved forward. The thing she carried in her arms was a large white bird, and it was quite still. The girl placed it in his arms. "Is it still alive?" she asked. "Yes. Yes, I think so. Come in, child, come in." Rider went inside bearing the bird, which he placed upon a table, where it moved feebly.

Curiosity overcame fear. The little girl followed and found herself in a room warmed by a coal fire, with many coloured pictures on the walls. The bird fluttered. With his good right hand Rider spread one of its immense white wings. Rider looked and marvelled, and said, "Child, where did you find it?"

"In the marsh, sir. What – what is it, sir?"

"It is a snow goose from Canada. But how in heaven did it come here?"

Concerned, she said, "Can you heal it, sir?"

"Yes, yes," said Rider. "We will try. Come, you shall help me."

There were scissors and bandages and splints on a shelf. He was marvellously deft, even with the crooked hand. He said, "Ah, she has been shot, poor thing. Her leg is broken, and also the wing tip, but not badly. We will bandage the wing closer to her body, so that she cannot move it until it has set, and then make a splint for the poor leg."

"We will call her the 'Lost Princess'. And in a few days, she will be much better." He reached into his pocket and produced a handful of grains. The snow goose opened its round yellow eyes and nibbled at it. The child laughed with delight.

He was afflicted with a hunched back and a deformed, twisted hand. Rider loved all creatures. His heart was filled with pity and understanding. He had mastered his handicap, but he could not master the rejection he suffered because of his appearance. People shunned him as evil. This drove him into seclusion.

One November afternoon, a child approached his lighthouse studio. In her arms, she carried a burden. She was no more than twelve, slender, dirty, nervous and timid as a bird, but beneath the dirt, as beautiful as a fairy. She seemed frightened of the ugly man she had come to see. But, she had heard somewhere in the swamp-land, that this man who lived in the lighthouse had magic that could heal injured things.

She had never seen Rider before and was close to fleeing in panic when she saw him. She stood there staring, but his voice was deep and kind when he spoke to her. "What is it, child?" She timidly moved forward. The thing she carried in her arms was a large white bird, and it was quite still. The girl placed it in his arms. "Is it still alive?" she asked. "Yes. Yes, I think so. Come in, child, come in." Rider went inside bearing the bird, which he placed upon a table, where it moved feebly.

Curiosity overcame fear. The little girl followed and found herself in a room warmed by a coal fire, with many coloured pictures on the walls. The bird fluttered. With his good right hand Rider spread one of its immense white wings. Rider looked and marvelled, and said, "Child, where did you find it?"

"In the marsh, sir. What – what is it, sir?"

"It is a snow goose from Canada. But how in heaven did it come here?"

Concerned, she said, "Can you heal it, sir?"

"Yes, yes," said Rider. "We will try. Come, you shall help me."

There were scissors and bandages and splints on a shelf. He was marvellously deft, even with the crooked hand. He said, "Ah, she has been shot, poor thing. Her leg is broken, and also the wing tip, but not badly. We will bandage the wing closer to her body, so that she cannot move it until it has set, and then make a splint for the poor leg."

"We will call her the 'Lost Princess'. And in a few days, she will be much better." He reached into his pocket and produced a handful of grains. The snow goose opened its round yellow eyes and nibbled at it. The child laughed with delight.

Read the given passage and answer the questions that follow.

In the late spring of 1930, Philip Rider came to the abandoned lighthouse at the mouth of the river Adder on the Essex coast. He was a painter of birds and of nature. He was afflicted with a hunched back and a deformed, twisted hand. Rider loved all creatures. His heart was filled with pity and understanding. He had mastered his handicap, but he could not master the rejection he suffered because of his appearance. People shunned him as evil. This drove him into seclusion.
