Comprehension:

Read the following passage and answer the questions.

Spread across a mere 1km radius, Shani Shingnapur is a small town of about 200 houses in the Ahmednagar district of Maharashtra, India, where throngs of pilgrims come to offer their prayers to the Hindu god, Lord Shani.

Here, you will find one of the most venerated temples of Lord Shani in the country, and Shani Shingnapur residents unanimously put their faith in the deity as their protector. Due to a 300-year-old legend, no house in the village has doors. And this belief extends beyond the residential houses to nearly all the town's civic establishments, from hotels to the police station and even the bank. And there's not a single shop in Shani Shingnapur where you can buy locks and keys.

The Shani Shingnapur's shrine of Lord Shani is a 1.5 m black monolith installed on a platform without a cover from any side. Mustard oil ceaselessly pours out of a container suspended above the shrine, bathing the idol with the metaphorical dedication of his devotees. The temple remains open 24 hours a day, all year around.

Although, originally a humble abode to the deity, the much-visited temple is now administered by a trust that receives a substantial amount of donations from pilgrims and devotees. With time, the popularity of Shani Shingnapur has surged and the faith of the residents has strengthened.

Locals continue to live in simple and functional accommodations that are left open throughout the seasons, with mere doorframes for entrances. Curtains can provide some sense of privacy, and plywood sometimes guards the bottom half of the doorway to keep stray animals at bay. Locals go about their daily chores without worrying about the security of their houses and belongings; such is their staunch faith in Lord Shani that they even travel out of town for days without asking their neighbours to keep vigil.

"If someone has been dishonest or tries to steal in the village, that person would be unable to escape the punishments of Lord Shani and will bear the consequences of his actions," said Dyaneshwar Kudalkar, who runs a guest house catering to pilgrims.

"When we are protected to this extent, we need not worry about making external arrangements for safety. There have been instances where people have installed doors or latches in their houses and have suffered accidents, losses in business or bad luck."

SubQuestion No: 46

Q.4 What is unique about the town of Shani Singnapur?
